Fostering Apocalypse is a game that challenges players to rebuild a generation of people in a world devastated by a nuclear holocaust. Players guide a group of characters as they rebuild their home town into a flourishing metropolis. In the process, they encounter many new and changing factions in the world. Your Game and the Art Book Fostering Apocalypse is the ideal artistic development game. For novice players, it can serve as a great introduction to the art of games or for seasoned game artists as a case study of artistic development. The Art Book PDF is for use in the game. It's like a window into my head. —Jeff Tunnell, Studio Director

The Art Book is comprised of: 17 Page Art Book PDF detailing the art, concepts, and design of Fostering Apocalypse, character and building concept art, sketches and UI elements. Concept art of key locations in the game and all of the in-game assets. Process documentation describing the different character models and building models used in the game. Phone wallpapers of the in-game worlds. Character and Building Concept Art

The Art Book is brimming with character and building concept art spanning the length of the game. My favorite parts are the studies of key characters and buildings. Jeff Tunnell Studio Director “Fostering Apocalypse is so different from most other games. It's not just a complex narrative about a post-apocalyptic world, it's also a complex artistic narrative about the development of a game. It's art and story integrated into a game. So the Art Book is really a window into my head and the studio's. It's a reflection of what I was thinking as I was writing and designing the game.” The Art Book is brimming with character and building concept art spanning the length of the game. My favorite parts are the studies of key characters and buildings.

polarization-enabled, switch-mode signal detectors. We theoretically and experimentally demonstrate a switch-mode polarization-based detector that is capable of simultaneously performing detection and polarization-state control of a light beam. In our design, a polarization bender is embedded in the polarization-control loop that is used to modulate the beam polarization state in real-time. We first perform numerical simulations of the detector, and then use it to detect dual-polarization signals encoded in the state of a cross-polarized signal beam. The sensitivity of our polarization-state-controlled switch-mode detector is experimentally demonstrated by measuring the photon counts of two cross-polarized signals at different optical intensities.

What's new in Lil Tanks:

Cash Rush (also known as Just for Money and The Brick Game) is an online scam/gambling game where the player sits next to a brick wall and tries to hit a set of numbers that form a block of numbers and a set of symbols. Gameplay Cash Rush is a live-action gambling game where the player plays against real brick wall that has 30 whole numbers displayed on the wall, along with patterns of dice, coins, or bill inserts. Players are given from 1 to 20 strikes of the dice and will win based upon the number of dice they roll in a given number of tries. If a player rolls doubles on the dice, they may earn additional prizes. The game play time is 5 minutes per number and 1 minute per symbol. Upon completing a round players go next, where the next "brick" is and the reset the betting to one round. The player may also win money based upon the frequency the player rolls a winning number and the amount of money they have at the time of the result. Players can access their 'wallet' by selecting the amount that they are required to put in the game and receive that amount at the conclusion. Controversy Cash Rush has been the subject of controversy as the game is offered for free online. The user reviews quickly became very unfavourable, many in regards to the probability of winning, especially with the odds being set to a user's advantage. Many players were criticized for playing in order to win "extra" prizes and missed placing bets. In 2014, Cash Rush filed a lawsuit against another developer, 68 Studios, Inc., for their adaptation of the game in which 68 Studios placed the odds in favour of the players. 68 Studios argued that when the game was written they had the game as the official version. In 2015, the FTC had an investigation into the promotion of an illegal gambling site named Cash Rush. In 2016, FTC reached an agreement with the developer of the internet gambling service where both parties promised to make policy changes to prevent future FTC claims. The FTC also agreed to award $3 million to be split amongst individuals who had been injured by the scheme. Cash Rush is known for attempting to keep players engaged by providing "bonuses" for freestyle rapping. The strongest bonus given out at the moment is to defuse the bomb placed on the wall (if a player is able to hit the "magic" numbers, they will be immediately given
